has money, so he is determined to tender his personal appearance gratis. Unfortunately, Honolulu is not in his itinerary.

Towering snowcapped peaks and deep sunken valleys, in the midst of the Swiss Alps, has been the abode of Miss Marguerite Clark for some time past, experiencing some of the most unusual happenings of her career. Dangling at the end of a rope with nothing but misty atmosphere between her and the base of the chasm, 600 feet below, snow-bound in a cabin with none but a beast of a man as a companion, swept away pell mell by an avalanche, home belongings and all, half starved, bewildered and on the verge of nervous collapse, such were some of the dizzy young lady's experiences. It all happened, however, in the course of her work upon the wonderful production of the Paramount "Out of the Drifts," in which she plays the part of Elsie, a little Swiss shepherdess. It is a startling tale, and one in which Miss Clark has an opportunity of doing a different sort of acting than ever before. This big Famous Players' feature is due in Honolulu in two weeks.

Anna Held, the noted French comedienne, knocked out temperment in a human way, and created a unique sensation. Straight from the shoulder, a tiny fist tightly clenched, shot out. It went right to the mark, and down went John Temperament for the count. Triumphant over scores of others, he had met a more worthy adversary and defeat was his. This, in a figurative sense, yet holding a literal truth to show that Anna Held scored again, this time over a bugaboo that made the leap from the legitimate stage to the motion picture field along with other traditional nothings. Weak-kneed and groggy, John may rise again, with the aid of some lesser light than his conqueror, but he will never be a welcome visitor at the studio of the Oliver Morosco Company where Anna, during her first work for the screen, did not.

Bite anyone; Kick her co-workers on the shins, or—

Tell her directors that she would not do this or not do that. But where she— Did as she was directed to do; Made herself so agreeable that employes could not do enough for her, and—

Called for the praise from the heads of the company.

From all of which you may forget that referees are usually present at fistic encounters and form your own decision as to Anna Held's position in the realm of photo-drama. Here's some help. Having vanquished the elusive Mr. Temperament, the dainty Parisienne set about to emulate her success on the stage. Evidence that she did this, even more, surpasses herself, is to be found in "Madame la Presidente." Declaring she hadn't time to think of trivial things, such as eating lunch, or working overtime, is unusual for great stars. Her expected ravings and rantings were agreeably missed at the studios, and her demand—the only demand she made, in fact, that she should see each scene developed, making sure to her own satisfaction that she "took well," is a remarkable proof of her determination to make this one motion picture effort a credit to her popular career.

AUGUST MID-PACIFIC MAGAZINE PRESENTS EXCELLENT FEATURES

The Mid-Pacific Magazine for August is just off the press and comes out today, resplendent with a beautiful color cover, good illustrations, and interesting articles and stories. The main article for the month, boosting the proposed 1919 Exposition, is perhaps the best illustrated and most worthy of comment. The 16 half-tones of scenes in many lands about the Pacific ocean are clear-cut and instructive, and the article itself gives much information of interest to those interested in the proposed Honolulu Exposition in 1919.

"We Reach the Solomons" is the title of this month's installment of the "Cruise of the Shark" by Mrs. Jack London. It is, perhaps, an account of the most interesting phase of the cruise of the little vessel.

There are articles and stories from and concerning every part of Hawaii and the Pacific, all profusely illustrated.

COUNTRY CLUB WILL NOT FILE PROTESTS NOW

No protest will be filed by the Country Club against Circle Drive as an outlet for Puunui until after the preliminary report of the city engineer on the project is filed, according to E. W. Sutton, president of the club.

The plan will just die a natural death then," said Sutton this morning. "The cost will be so high that Puunui will have nothing to do with it. It will run to more than four cents a square foot, I believe. Puunui does not expect it to run over two, I am told."

MOON IN PARTIAL ECLIPSE.

What many people thought to be a cloud hiding part of the moon Friday night was in reality a partial eclipse. The eclipse began before moonrise here but nowhere was it a total eclipse. The moon was about one-third hidden when it rose, but shone in its full glory about 8 o'clock.
